Staff distancing means staggered kitchen time. The right packaging will enable your chefs to prep and store menus ahead of time. There are limitless packaging options so it's important to choose the form that showcases your food to its best potential. People still eat with their eyes so presentation is key to sales, and that includes how food looks after delivery.

HELPING YOU GET BACK TO BUSINESS

REVIEW YOUR OPERATION

1 TIMESCALES

Let us know your proposed timescales and we will work with you to manage your restock and first delivery.

2 PLAN YOUR SPACE

Consider what impact social distancing will have on your business and how you will put it into practice throughout your operation.

3 REVIEW YOUR MENU

Do you need a refresh or a simplified menu adapted to reduced staff and skill levels, that delivers the margin you need? Please get in contact with your local Area Sales Manager for advice and guidance on creative and practical menu solutions.

PREPARE YOUR OPERATION

4 YOUR TEAM

It might not be possible for all of your team to come back in one go, so you may need to train your team to work across different roles.

5 YOUR CUSTOMERS

It may take a while for customer confidence to return, so reassure them about the measures you've put in place to help them stay safe, and consider how their needs may have changed.

6 HYGIENE FACTORS

Put in place robust hygiene processes, train your staff and make switches that will reassure customers.
